

MATILDA is the first joint European Master Degree programme in Women's and Gender History. The programme is spread over two years and links five leading European universities in an exciting, innovative and unique venture. The partner institutions are the University of Vienna (coordinating institution), the Sofia University St. Kliment Ohridski, the Université Lumière Lyon 2, the Central European University (CEU) in Budapest and the University of Nottingham.

The MATILDA curriculum includes modules in core subjects in Women's and Gender History (theory, methodology, and practice) and specialist options ranging from medieval to contemporary themes and encouraging comparative and transnational perspectives on European history.

Students can expect to study in at least two different countries over the course of four semesters. There will also be a summer Intensive Programme that will bring together students and academics from all partner institutions.

MATILDA is a research master designed for students wishing to develop expertise in Women's and Gender History, as well as in European history, and who are interested in intercultural exchange. It offers the chance to study with leading European scholars of women's and gender history.

The programme will start in autumn 2008. Applications are welcome to the consortium university of your choice.
